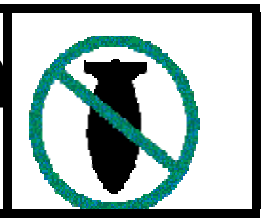
Stop the War Coalition

Defend the Right to Protest



Seven anti-war protesters were arrested in Whitehall on 31sst October during a peaceful demonstration organised by the Stop the War Coalition. The protesters, who formed part of a 5,000 strong demonstration, were followed by police after the demonstration had dispersed and arrested.

They are now being charged with public order offences, including violent disorder, an offence which carries a maximum sentence of five years in jail. All those charged strongly deny the offences. The police have so far not brought forward any evidence against Leo Zeilig, one of those facing the most serious charges and have already asked for 2 adjournments.

We, the undersigned, believe that people have every right to protest against this war, without intimidation and threat of imprisonment for doing so. We, therefore, call for the charges to be dropped and send our support to those arrested.
